1. What cookies are

A cookie is a small text file a website stores in your browser. It lets the site recognise the same visit, remember your choices, and keep you signed in when you return.

A cookie is not a program. It cannot read other files on your device and does not send anything to a third party by itself; what it holds is decided by the site that set it.

2. Cookies we use

The site sets one first-party cookie, which records your cookie choice. Beyond that there are no analytics, advertising, or tracking cookies.

COOKIE	PURPOSE	SET BY	RETENTION
`cc_cookie`	Records whether you accepted or declined optional cookies	This site	182 days
Human-verification token	Confirms a sign-up or sign-in comes from a person, not a script	Cloudflare Turnstile	Session, or minutes

Two points explain why the table is short:

- Being signed in is not a cookie. The sign-in credential lives in the browser's local storage, is not attached to every request, and never crosses sites. Clearing browser data clears it too, and you sign in again.
- Cookies on the payment page are set by the payment provider. When you move to a provider's payment page, that provider sets transaction cookies under its own domain. They are not on this domain and we do not read them.

3. Cookies we do not use

None of the following are in use:

- Analytics: no visit counts, heat maps, or click-stream recording;
- Advertising: no retargeting, conversion attribution, or audience profiling;
- Cross-site tracking: no third-party advertising identifiers, no tracking across other sites;
- Social plugins: no embedded buttons that report browsing behaviour.

There is therefore no advertising preference to manage here, and no browsing data that could be sold or shared.

4. How your choice is remembered

On a first visit a panel appears at the bottom of the page. You can accept optional cookies or keep necessary ones only; each is a single click, and declining does not limit your use of the site.

Your choice is stored in `cc_cookie`. To change it, open “Manage cookies” from that panel, or “Change cookie preferences” on the privacy page. The change applies immediately and you stay signed in.

5. Retention and browser settings

`cc_cookie` lasts 182 days, and the verification token usually expires minutes after you complete the check. Session cookies expire when the browser closes.

Your browser settings let you inspect, delete, or block cookies; the route is usually under Help, or Settings → Privacy. Blocking necessary cookies affects sign-in and remembering your choice, and parts of the site will stop working.

Clearing browser data clears both your cookie choice and your sign-in, and we will ask for your preference again on the next visit.

6. Email and measurement

We do not use open-rate or click-tracking pixels in marketing email, and we do not record how long you read a message. Email is limited to what you asked for: payment results, invoices, and password resets.

If you would rather not receive a type of email, use the unsubscribe link at the foot of the message, or contact us.

7. Third-party sites

The site links to third-party sites, including payment providers and social media. Those sites have their own cookie and privacy policies, which this notice does not cover; once you leave, read theirs.

8. Changes to this notice

When we add a cookie or change what one is for, we update this notice before the change takes effect. The current version is published on this page, with a document reference in the footer so versions can be compared.

9. Cookies and your privacy

Information collected through cookies can amount to personal data. How we collect, use, retain, and share it, and the rights you have, are set out in the privacy policy.
